CLIVE BARBER

ABOVE: Westmount may rank behind St. George's, Jasper Park, Banff Springs and Highlands Links as Stanley Thompson's best, but it has been a preferred course for such notable golfers as Gary Cowan and Moe Norman.

11 DEVIL'S PAINTBRUSH
The younger of the two Devil's Pulpit Golf Association golf courses, Devil's Paintbrush slipped past its elder brother on this ranking in 2002 — a move unlikely to reverse. The Brush, as it is familiarly known, is unlike any other golf course in Canada. Built in homage to Old World courses, it is brilliantly peppered with pot bunkers, fescue, old stone walls, rustic ruins and gigantic greens, making it an absolute treat to tackle.

12 THE LINKS AT CROWBUSH COVE
Long a mainstay among this ranking's top 10 courses, Crowbush was percentage points away from keeping that run alive this time around. A Tom McBroom delight, Crowbush Cove is situated on Prince Edward Island's north shore and incorporates rolling fairways, pot bunkering and multi-tiered greens into a links-inspired routing. Despite the slip, it's still a favourite of Island residents and vacationers. And with peak fees just over $100, it remains one of the best valued courses in Canada.

13 SHAUGHNESSY G&CC
Shaughnessy, which has existed on its current site since 1960, is most certainly one of the most acclaimed courses in Canada. PGA Tour players raved about the course when it hosted the 2005 Open with none other than veteran and then defending champ Vijay Singh saying the tree-lined A.V. Macan track must be the best in the country. That could be a bit of an exaggeration, but it's been held in high enough regard over the years to hold the RBC Canadian Open on four occasions with another slated to take place next year (the first Shaughnessy Open was held on the club's original location). Shaughnessy's long and distinguished run at its existing site will come to an end however. Located on First Nations' land, its lease expires in 2033 and the club will be relocating. A preliminary search is already underway.

14 WESTMOUNT G&CC
Westmount is a bustling private club with a rich history and a stunning Stanley Thompson-designed golf course that many consider to be better than its ranking here. It's a design that never tires and while there are several brutes to overcome, there are (what seem to be) some breather holes — such as short par 4s eight and 14 — that offer a break of sorts. The four par 3s are top notch, with both back nine shorties played to conniving greens.

15 COPPINWOOD
Coppinwood, a private Tom Fazio course north of Toronto, has been highly acclaimed since opening in 2006. The course always plays fast and firm (a treat for golf purists) and because it's surrounded by environmentally protected land, the character of the club is unlikely to change. The course boasts a phenomenal back nine, highlighted by holes 11, 12 and 13, and word has it the club is pressing hard to host a future RBC Canadian Open.

16 TOBIANO
Every once in a while a course comes along that makes an instant and profound impact on the Canadian golf scene. In 2007, Tom McBroom's Tobiano did just that. Located on a breathtaking natural site — valley-filled desert terrain besieged by golden fescue and framed by mountains and the gorgeous Kamloops Lake — Tobiano exudes a rugged beauty that culminates in a very difficult, yet enjoyable golf experience. Several forced carries are required so choosing the correct tee deck is paramount.

17 DEVIL'S PULPIT
The first of two Michael Hurdzan/Dana Fry Devil's Pulpit Golf Association courses, the Pulpit, while ranked behind Devil's Paintbrush, remains the first-class course it has been since bursting onto the Canadian golf scene in 1990. A unique layout on the Niagara Escarpment, the Pulpit lets golfers know what's in store right out of the gate as the first hole is a downhill 478-yard par 4 that hugs an intimidating water hazard. What follows is a truly tantalizing challenge.

18 OVIINBYRD Off Muskoka's beaten path and containing a capped membership, Oviinbyrd is not much of an attention-seeker. Fortunately for the legitimacy of this ranking, enough panellists have played Tom McBroom's beauty for the course to meet our eligibility requirements. More subtle than McBroom's nearby Rocky Crest, and certainly more mild than Doug Carrick's Muskoka Bay down the road, Oviinbyrd gets stronger as it goes, culminating in a fantastic finish beginning with the jaw-dropping, downhill-over-water par-3 14th.

20 ROCKY CREST GC Though he worked with Bob Cupp on Huntsville's Deerhurst Highlands a decade earlier, Tom McBroom's Rocky Crest, which opened in 2000, solidified him as the authority in creating wonder in the wild in Ontario's rugged Muskoka region. By building around and over rocky outcroppings rather than blasting them all away, McBroom created a golf course genre of sorts that inspired other top-notch designs in the area, including his nearby Oviinbyrd and The Ridge at Manitou an hour north.

19 TORONTO GC Arguably one of the most influential golf courses in Canada, Toronto was the brilliant vision of English designer Harry Colt. How important was Toronto? It was the first course created by a man working almost full time as a golf course designer. Colt would go on to create Hamilton G&CC, and work as a consultant at Pine Valley in New Jersey, generally regarded as the best course in the world. But it was Toronto that set the stage. Though tweaked by Howard Watson, who rebuilt several greens, Toronto remained true to Colt's vision. In 2009, the club undertook an ambitious plan to renovate the course using English architect Martin Hawtree. Hawtree's concept was to rework the course using a bunker style and details that were common to the later part of Colt's career as a designer. The result: A more dramatic bunker style, and a visual appeal that matches Toronto's peerless charms.

BELOW: If aerial photography is indeed a golf course's most marketable modern-day lure, Tebiano scores extremely high. The pristine Kamloops Lake can be viewed at just about every turn.

Panellist Comments:

DEVIL'S PAINTBRUSH

"I could play the Paintbrush exclusively and never tire of it. The course offers endless variety and challenge, and there's no course in Canada that is more fun to play."

THE LINKS AT CROWBUSH COVE

"Ah Crowbush. If you are lucky enough to catch a calm day it's very enjoyable. When the wind is at its best your ball is like a flea in a hurricane."

COPPINWOOD

"Visually stunning golf course. A fun design and Tom Fazio's angling of tee decks eliminates forced carries for the less proficient player."

DEVIL'S PULPIT

"The Pulpit is like a fine wine. Every year the experience keeps getting better."

OVIINBYRD

"The par 5s are all perfect risk/reward. Enjoyable to play at a very relaxed pace."

ROCKY CREST GC

"I wish I owned a float plane. I would spend a lot of time at Rocky Crest."

LEFT: Victoria GC, a layout that dates back to 1893, boasts some of the most stunning ocean vistas of any golf course in the world.

OLD VS. NEW

have to scroll down to No. 24 (Bigwin Island) to find the 15th best post-1960 design; you've got to go to No. 50 (Calgary G&CC) to find the 15th best classic design. That's likely a reflection of the golf course construction boom of the 1990s, a surge that most certainly has come to an end. So modern day architecture reigns supreme in terms of quantity, while classic courses have the edge when it comes to quality. The question for you is: which 'Q' word is more important?

BELOW: Tom Fazio's Coppinwood is one of Canada's more celebrated modern designs, with its 12th hole the central part of a phenomenal three-hole stretch.

*1960-Present
(Top 100 rank in parenthesis)

While The National GC of Canada — a 1975 George and Tom Fazio design — maintains its position as Canada's No. 1 golf course, a collection of classic, pre-1960 courses continues to comprise the bulk of Canada's top 15. Stanley Thompson has a lot to do with that as his courses occupy spots three through seven on the Top 100. And that's a pattern unlikely to change. While the post-Second World War machine age allowed golf architects to begin moving large amounts of earth to accommodate their visions, the artistry and settings of courses such as Jasper Park or Highland Links remains unmatched. But it's hard to bat away the masses and with modern day courses outnumbering classic courses 65-35 on this list, it makes sense that you only
